Eating Disorders Justine J. Reel, 2018-05-10 This encyclopedia offers a variety of resources for readers interested in learning more about eating disorders, including hundreds of reference entries, interviews, scholarly debates, and case studies. While many people may reflexively imagine an anorexic or bulimia teenage girl upon being asked to think about eating disorders, eating disorders are a form of mental illness that can take many forms and affect individuals of all genders, ages, and ethnic backgrounds. In fact, an estimated eight million people in the United States struggle with an eating disorder, making eating disorders one of the most prevalent forms of mental illness in America. This two-volume encyclopedia comprehensively examines eating disorders as the forms they can take; their causes and potential complications; and how they can best be treated and prevented. It also examines the influence had by cultural factors such as the fashion industry, television and movies, and social media. More than just a simple A-to-Z reference, Eating Disorders: Understanding Causes, Controversies, and Treatment also includes valuable features such as Q&A interviews with those affected by and working to combat eating disorders, case studies, scholarly essays that voice opinions in key debates, and a directory of resources for individuals seeking help.

Critical Bodies Sarah Riley, 2008-01-15 This book showcases a selection of current work and debates on weight and body management practices that are being produced from the vibrant arena of critical and postmodern approaches in the social sciences. Weight issues have become central to Western understandings of health and identity, but analyses of weight and body management have often failed to contextualise weight related issues. This timely book addresses this gap by examining three key areas, namely, representation, identities, and practice, to explore and interrogate how body and weight management, subjectivities, experiences, and practices are constituted within and by the normative discourses of contemporary western culture.

An Interactive Psychoeducational Intervention for Women At-risk of Developing an Eating Disorder Marion F. Zabinski, 2003 Body image concerns are extremely widespread in our society and have been linked to psychological problems as well as the development of eating disorders. One difficulty in treating these concerns is that people often delay treatment due to shame or embarrassment. Therefore, a potentially effective means of treatment delivery is through anonymous, computerized interventions offered via the Internet. While few studies have been conducted overall, initial research with computerized psychoeducation and asynchronous programs has been promising. However, no studies have systematically evaluated the efficacy of synchronous communication, and none have been tested within the eating disorder domain. This study evaluated the effectiveness of a synchronous intervention for college-aged women at risk for developing an eating disorder, as defined by high body image concerns. Sixty women (mean age = 18.9 [SD = 2.4], 65% Caucasian, mean BMI = 25.6 [SD = 5.7]) with high body image concerns were randomly assigned to intervention (n = 30) or wait-list control (n = 30) groups. Each week during the 8-week program, participants logged onto a private chatroom and participated in a 1-hour, moderated discussion regarding body image and eating behaviors. The intervention was adapted from cognitive-behavioral techniques and self-directed behavior change theories to improve body satisfaction and problematic eating patterns before full syndrome disorders develop. Treatment components included psychoeducational readings, synchronous support (chat sessions), asynchronous support (message board), homework assignments, and discussion summaries. Assessments were conducted at baseline, post-treatment, and 10-weeks after post-treatment. Participants' indicated high satisfaction with the mode of intervention delivery. A significant interaction was found for eating disorder pathology as measured by the Eating Disorders Examination-Questionnaire Global score ( $F[2,116] = 4.04$ ,  $p$
