Playing the Academic Game Bryn Williams-Jones, 2025-02-04 "Playing the Academic Game" is the culmination of two years of weekly posts on the BrynStorming blog by Bryn Williams-Jones, professor of bioethics in the School of Public Health at the Université de Montréal. As an ethicist long interested by questions of justice, an important motivator for this project has been Williams-Jones' need to respond to the injustices encountered in academia. Many students and researchers fail in their studies or career progression not because they don't have the intellectual abilities or drive, but simply because they don't know what's expected of them or how to best present themselves in a competitive environment. That is, they don't know "the rules of the game," and this isn't fair, because the rules are rarely made explicit. In this book, which is organized into 5 major sections - The Academic Career Path, Professional Identity, University Life, Productivity and Creativity, and Multiple Responsibilities and Mental Health - Williams-Jones shares 30 years of experience in academia to make explicit the often-implicit norms and rules of academic life, so that all who wish to can fairly play the academic game.

Supporting Children with Communication Difficulties in Inclusive Settings Linda McCormick, Diane Frome Loeb, Richard L. It provides step-by-step directions and hands-on activities to give students practice in applying the procedures. The writing is clear and does not assume that the student has had previous courses or knowledge in speech-language intervention. The content offers basic strategies to assess, plan for, teach, and evaluate language and communication.

Measuring Outcomes in Children's Services Anne M. Christner, 1998

A Special Educator's Toolbox Renee Marie Perez, 2012 Despite the fact that autism awareness has improved in the last century, many educators, service providers, and parents have limited resources that help them educate and assist individuals who have this disability. The objective for this graduate project was to create and develop an interactive PowerPoint presentation, a resource that is epigrammatic and straightforward, yet also provides behavioral strategies one would need when working with a child with autism. The PowerPoint not only addresses behavior management, but it presents a number of interventions that can be used for each characteristic of autism: communication, social emotional, cognitive, and sensory.

The Classroom and Communication Skills Program Megan Ahlers, Colleen Hannigan Zillich, 2008 Educators looking for effective ways to help young children who are non- or limited-verbal and not table-ready will find this the solution to their search. The CCSP considers a combination of factors for verbal language in the development of programs for individual children, including verbal language, cognition, auditory function, oral-motor skills, receptive language and expressive language. The model emphasizes the importance of creating a fluid transition between a child's natural environments, such as home and school, in order to increase the chances of generalizing skills. While not specific to a particular disability, the program is a very helpful resource for educators working with children on the spectrum who have language deficits.
