Correlates of Global Assessment of Functioning (GAF) Scores for Older Adult Users of a Community Mental Health Center Danielle LaSure-Bryant, 2002 Social support, physical health and clinical characteristics are correlated with pre- and post-treatment Global Assessment of Functioning (GAF) scores. Seventy clinical files of older adults treated at several community mental health centers were evaluated for the study. It was hypothesized that (1) post-treatment GAF scores would be significantly higher than pre-treatment scores thereby demonstrating treatment effect; (2) older adults who had reported more access to social support and fewer chronic conditions would have higher GAF scores at the beginning of treatment; (3) change in GAF scores will be statistically and positively related to with variables of social support, physical health and clinical characteristics. For the first hypothesis, a dependent t test was used to determine treatment effect. Results revealed that there was a statistically significance difference between pre- and post-treatment GAF scores. Pearsons Correlation was used for the second hypothesis. Initial GAF scores were correlated with variables of social support and physical health. Results revealed no statistical significance. A step-wise multiple regression analysis was used to examine what variables contributed to the difference in GAF scores. Results showed two variables, number of sessions and total activities were statistically significant with higher end of treatment GAF scores. In addition to the hypotheses testing, demographic data from the study was compared with data from the U.S. census. Implications for clinical practice and future research are discussed as well.

Guidelines for Rating Global Assessment of Functioning (Gaf) Applied Research Press, 2015-08-13 Global Assessment of Functioning (GAF) is a scoring system for the severity of illness in psychiatry. It is used clinically in many countries, as well as in research, but studies have shown several problems with GAF, for example concerning its validity and reliability. Guidelines for rating are important. The present study aimed to identify the current status of guidelines for rating GAF, and relevant factors and gaps in knowledge for the development of improved guidelines. Few studies have dealt specifically with guidelines for rating GAF. Current guidelines for rating GAF are not comprehensive, and relevant points for new guidelines are presented. Theoretical and empirical studies, and international expert panels would be valuable, as well as production of a manual with more information about scoring. Computerised assessment may well be the future.

Global Assessment of Functioning (Gaf) Applied Research Press, 2015-08-16 Global Assessment of Functioning (GAF) is well known internationally and widely used for scoring the severity of illness in psychiatry. Problems with GAF show a need for its further development (for example validity and reliability problems). The aim of the present study was to identify gaps in current knowledge about properties of GAF that are of interest for further development. Properties of GAF are defined as characteristic traits or attributes that serve to define GAF (or may have a role to define a future updated GAF). In the history of GAF, its basic properties have undergone limited changes. Problems with GAF may, in part, be due to lack of a research programme testing the effects of different changes in basic properties. Given the widespread use, research-based development of GAF has not been especially strong. Further research could improve GAF.

Personality Assessment Lauren B. Palcroft,Melissa V. Lopez,2009 Personality assessment is the determination and evaluation of personality attributes by interviews, observations, tests, or scales. What, then, are the common properties of assessment, regardless of which area is examined? It is proposed that there are three common denominators: (a) Decisions, (b) Procedures, and (c) Data acquisition. In general, assessment may be defined as a procedure whereby data is collected for decision-making purposes. Specifically, then, psychological assessment is a procedure whereby data is collected for making decisions about people. Such a definition. although short and simple, has a major advantage in emphasising the role of decision-making in assessment. This book presents the latest research developments in the field.

Insight in Psychiatry Ivana Marková, 2005-10-13 Questions concerning the nature of insight in patients with mental illness have interested clinicians for a long time. To what extent can patients understand disorders which affect their mental function? Does insight carry a prognostic value? Is impaired insight determined by the illness or are other factors important? Despite considerable research examining insight in patients with psychoses, non-psychotic disorders and chronic organic brain syndromes, results are inconclusive and insight remains a source of some mystification. Ivana S. Marková examines the problems involved in studying insight in patients with mental illness in order to provide a clearer understanding of the factors that determine its clinical manifestation. She puts forward a new model to illustrate the relationship between different components of insight in theoretical and clinical terms, and points to directions for future research.

Performance Analysis for Public and Nonprofit Organizations XiaoHu Wang, 2010 The book focuses on application of performance analysis tools, not the theory of performance management. This text is an effective learning tool for students in analytical technique courses in public administration and policy programs. With other texts, students may learn about a statistical concept and calculation, but still don't understand the managerial context where the statistical tool applies. Consequently, they often fail to understand the managerial importance of statistical tools they learn, and worse, fail to recognize the correct tool to use when a managerial issue rises. This book corrects this problem by providing a managerial context that bridges statistical concepts and the managerial reality. The managerial context is performance management, in which performance data are presented, monitored, and analyzed. It is in this performance management context that the usefulness and applicability of statistical tools are illuminated for the learner.--BOOK JACKET.
