The question of humanity in the film "Blade Runner". Is there still a difference between man and machine? ,2021-07-29 Seminar paper from the year 2015 in the subject Film Science, grade: 1,0, University of Wuppertal, language: English, abstract: This paper examines the question of humanity in the film Blade Runner. The question of humanity represents a central theme in this science fiction film, directed by Ridley Scott and released in 1982. Blade Runner, which is set in Los Angeles in the year 2019, narrates the story of Rick Deckard, who is part of a specific police force, named the blade runners. The futuristic society of 2019 has developed the technology to create replicants, human-like androids, designed by Eldon Tyrell and the Tyrell Corporation. Fearing that the replicants could become too human, they are banned on earth and live in off-world colonies. The blade runners are in charge of tracking down and retiring (killing) those replicants illegitimately residing on earth.

Retrofitting Blade Runner Judith Kerman,1991 This book of essays looks at the multitude of texts and influences which converge in Ridley Scott's film Blade Runner, especially the film's relationship to its source novel, Philip K. Dick's Do Androids Dream of Electric Sheep? The film's implications as a thought experiment provide a starting point for important thinking about the moral issues implicit in a hypertechnological society. Yet its importance in the history of science fiction and science fiction film rests equally on its mythically and psychologically resonant creation of compelling characters and an exciting story within a credible science fiction setting. These essays consider political, moral and technological issues raised by the film, as well as literary, filmic, technical and aesthetic questions. Contributors discuss the film's psychological and mythic patterns, important political issues and the roots of the film in Paradise Lost, Frankenstein, detective fiction, and previous science fiction cinema.

Contemporary Research on Intertextuality in Video Games Duret, Christophe, Pons, Christian-Marie, 2016-06-16 Culture is dependent upon intertextuality to fuel the consumption and production of new media. The notion of intertextuality has gone through many iterations, but what remains constant is its stalwart application to bring to light what audiences value through the marriages of disparate ideology and references. Videogames, in particular, have a longstanding tradition of weaving texts together in multimedia formats that interact directly with players. Contemporary Research on Intertextuality in Video Games brings together game scholars to analyze the impact of video games through the lenses of transmediality, intermediality, hypertextuality, architextuality, and paratextuality. Unique in its endeavor, this publication discusses the vast web of interconnected texts that feed into digital games and their players. This book is essential reading for game theorists, designers, sociologists, and researchers in the fields of communication sciences, literature, and media studies.

Science and the Creative Imagination in Latin America Evelyn Fishburn, Eduardo L. Ortiz, 2005 This book considers the relationship between the humanities and the sciences in a Latin American context. The geographical emphasis is important, given the prominent role of science in the formation of the region's nation-states and its strong presence in Latin American cultural output. Most of the chapters focus on fictional narratives and scientific discourses. Questions of consent, resistance, and ideology in both fields are considered. The historical study of interplay between science and the novel helps identify what people were expected to believe at a given time, and reveals how these beliefs were sustained. This book provides insight into the connection between individual self-understanding and the surrounding world of science, within the broader question of the place of science in Latin American culture. Chapters include: • Darwin in South America: Geology, Imagination and Encounter • Walking Backward to the Future: Time, Travel and Race • Natural Parts and Unnatural Others: A reflection on Patrimony at the Turn of the 19th Century • On the Transition from Realism to the Fantastic in the Argentina of the 1870s: Holmberg and the Six of Córdoba • Literature and Science in Martinez Estrada's Work • The Nature Effect in Latin American Science Publications: The Case of the Journal Redes • Two Scientific Traditions in Martín Fierro • Heisenberg's Uncertainty Principle in Contemporary Spanish American Fiction • Constructing Postcoloniality: Scientific Enquiries in Cien Años de Soledad • Holograms and Simulacra: Bioy Casares, Subiela, Piglia • The Desert Poetics of Mario Montalbetti: Writing, Knowledge, Topologies

How a Film Theory Got Lost and Other Mysteries in Cultural Studies Robert Beverley Ray, 2001 In the 1920s, when film criticism was as new as the cinema itself, a particular way of thinking about the movies developed in Paris. The cinema, this theory suggested, turns on photography's automatism, the revolutionary fact that for the first time in human history, a perfect representation of the world can be produced by accident. Moreover, the camera's gaze has the potential to transform everyday life's most ordinary objects - a telephone, a letter on a desk, a woman's face - into spellbinding images, swarming with details whose precise appeal remains unpredictable. By the 1930s, this theory of photogénie (photogenia) had vanished from most serious writing about film. Why did this disappearance occur? In his collection of essays, Robert B. Ray discusses this mystery and others like it: Why did photography and the detective story originate at exactly the same time? Why has some of the most prominent academic writing about the cinema resisted anything but scientific accounts of the movies? What counts as knowledge in film studies or any intellectual discipline? What do the French Impressionists have in common with the Sex Pistols? How did Douglas Sirk's critically ignored melodramas become subversive critiques of bourgeois ideology? How is what happened to Sirk's movies a way to understand Postmodernism and the avant-garde? In taking up these questions, Ray's essays challenge certain ideas about film and cultural studies, while arguing for a mode of writing about the movies and experimental art that would respect the abidingly mysterious effect of their images and sounds. -- from back cover.
