The Unlearning of School Attendance: Ideas for Change Carolyn Gentle-Genitty, Arya Ansari, Ineke Marshall, Michael Gottfried, 2024-04-10 This Research Topic on Unlearning Attendance champions a serious look at school attendance and absenteeism. It examines all forms of school attendance problems ranging from school refusal, truancy, school withdrawal, to school avoidance and its correlates of criminal, socio-emotional, developmental, psychological, academic, fiscal, technological, and societal impact. The issue gives a synopsis on the known problems and challenges but also those exacerbated by the pandemic and ideas for improvement.

The role of parent-child interactions in developmental psychopathology: methodological and intervention challenges and opportunities Rebecca Pearson,Tamsen Jean Rochat,Bronwyne Coetzee,2025-03-06 Parenting research has always faced substantial methodological challenges, assumptions and stigma, limiting understanding and translation to more family-centred support. In addition, the focus of most research has focused on the early years with far less knowledge about the role of parents in pre-adolescence, adolescence, and the transition to adulthood or beyond. Parenting work lacks diversity with regards to inclusion across cultural settings and is usually limited to mothers, the role of fathers, grandparents, adoptive and foster parents and step parents is under-represented. Current advancements in technology and data science as well as cross-cohort collaboration enabling pooling of observed parent-offspring interaction in larger numbers provides opportunities to bring together new understanding. In addition, enabling the voice of diverse parents with lived experience throughout the research process will enhance the meaning and interpretation of findings.

Child Behavior Checklist Behavioral Profiles of Children with Autism Spectrum Disorders Lauren Kathleen Giovingo,2009 Therefore, the purpose of this study was to determine if patterns of normative strengths and weaknesses on the subscales of the CBCL are similar for individuals with ASD, nonASD controls, and those clinic-referred for behavior disorders. Profile analysis was used to compare the behaviors of (a) individuals with ASD to their normal controls, and (b) individuals with ASD to individuals clinic-referred for behavior difficulties. Results revealed that individuals with ASD displayed significantly higher scores on seven out of the eight CBCL subscales when compared to their nonASD controls. When compared to individuals clinic-referred for behavior difficulties, the ASD group displayed significantly higher scores on two of the CBCL areas. These findings support the use of the CBCL as a screening tool. Implications and conclusions are discussed and areas for future research are provided.

Identifying Children at Risk of Autism Spectrum Disorder with the Child Behavior Checklist 1.5-5 and the Influence of Intellectual Capability on the Use of the CBCL Katharina Limberg,2019

Using the Child Behavior Checklist/6-18 to Develop a Screening Scale for Autism Spectrum Disorders in Early School-age Children James Stewart Smith,2008 This research attempted to use a common child behavior rating scale, the Child Behavior

Checklist/6-18 (CBCL; Achenbach & Rescorla, 2001) in order to construct a screening measure for Autism Spectrum Disorders (ASDs). Rather than using scale elevations and depressions to determine a pattern characteristic of ASDs, this study used a preexisting item pool and constructed a new scale specifically for ASDs (Pervasive Developmental Disorders Scale; CBCL-PDS). A receiver operating characteristic (ROC) analysis was applied to 57 subjects diagnosed with a Pervasive Developmental Disorder (PDD) and 59 non-PDD clinical control subjects to determine an appropriate cut-point. With equal weighting between precision and recall, a sum score of 9 demonstrated an area under the curve (AUC) of .75 with moderate sensitivity (.84) and moderate specificity (.61). These findings suggest that it is possible to develop a scale using preexisting item pool on the CBCL to screen for ASDs in early school-age children.

A Validation Study of a Jordanian Version of the Autism Behavior Checklist (ABC) of the Autism Screening Instrument for Educational Planning (ASIEP) Jamil Mahmoud Smadi, 1985

Autism Screening Tools Andrea N. Witwer, 2005 Abstract: This study examined the diagnostic validity, convergence, and internal consistency of the Developmental Behavior Checklist-Autism Screening Algorithm (DBC-ASA) and the Social Communication Questionnaire (SCQ) in school-aged children with and without Pervasive Developmental Disorders (PDDs). Forty-nine participants, 33 diagnosed with PDDs and 16 with mental retardation (MR), were recruited in 11 school districts throughout Ohio (26% response rate). Parents/guardians completed a demographic form, a measure of adaptive behavior, and the two autism- screening instruments. Using the SCQ authors' proposed cutoff of 15, sensitivity was .89 and specificity was .62. Using the DBC-ASA authors' proposed cutoff of 17, sensitivity was .94 and specificity was only .46. Raising the DBC-

ASA cutoff to 19 decreased sensitivity to .89 and increased specificity to .61. The rate of false positives in this sample increased with the severity of problem behavior when using the DBC-ASA. No other subject characteristics were associated with diagnostic validity. The SCQ and the DBC-ASA were moderately correlated with one another ($r = .53$). The DBC Total Problem Behavior score was significantly correlated with the DBC-ASA score ($r = .81$), but not significantly associated with the SCQ ($r = .17$). The DBC-ASA and SCQ had good internal consistency, with alpha coefficients of, .81 and .89, respectively. While both instruments had good psychometric properties, the results of this study suggest that clinician and researchers should exercise caution when utilizing the DBC-ASA to screen for PDDs in individuals with significant behavior problems, as this appears to decrease its diagnostic validity.
