New features of the third edition: Every chapter has been revised and updated with current research in the field, including material on sexuality, polylinguaging and lifespan change; Additional Connections with theory and Facts: No, really? are included throughout; Data from sign languages, historical linguistics and Asia-Pacific sociolinguistics have been revised and expanded; A brand new companion website featuring more examples and exercises can be found at www.routledge.com/textbooks/meyerhoff. The rise of the quotative "be like" and sociolinguistic stereotypes amongst young speakers Leona Sedlaczek, 2021-01-14
Seminar paper from the year 2020 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies - Linguistics, grade: 1,7, Christian-Albrechts-University of Kiel (Englisches Seminar), language: English, abstract: One hundred years ago, the quotative "be like" did not exist. Today, "like" ranks within the top ten words of linguistic corpora of teen language and "be like" is the most favored quotative of speakers younger than forty. Hence, the paper focuses on the quotative "be like" and its remarkable pathway of an emerging new linguistic feature of the mid-20th century to one of the core features of teen language and a potentially new standard quotative of the English language in general. Linguistic evidence for the rise of "be like" presented in this paper is mainly based on the findings of Canadian linguist Sali A. Tagliamonte who analyzed teen language on the basis of several corpora over the past decades. Her 2016 publication Teen Talk sets her apart from many other sociolinguistic studies on the quotative "be like" as a majority of them have been published in the late 20th century, rendering them partly out of date as "be like" is still on the rise. Tagliamonte's work not only offers an insight into historic data but also takes the linguistic developments of the early 2000s into account which allows a timely assessment of the seemingly ever-changing quotative "be like". In the second section of this paper, other linguists' recent study results will be taken into account to assess "be like's" status as a quotative of the 21st century. In a third step, differing sociolinguistic implications regarding "be like" will be illustrated by examining the sociolinguistic implications of "be like". The paper hence aims at approaching possible answers to the question of how the rise of "be like" can be explained by illustrating different stages of development hinged on various generations of speakers based on Tagliamonte's research. The current status of "be like" is assessed and put into context with popular culture and social media. The emergence of "be like" will be put into context with stereotypes about teenagers' impact on language change as well as with the so-called Valley Girl phenomenon. By examining the sociolinguistic implications linked to "be like's" current popularity, it will be shown that "be like" is not simply a phenomenon of teen language but might instead settle within the English grammar of the 21st century.

Science Diplomacy and Neocolonialism: Lessons from the field with a view to the future Rana Dajani ,Tania Bosqui,Rasha Bayoumi ,Abdullah Awad,2025-11-06 For the past three decades, scientists and policymakers in the Global South have practiced science diplomacy under neocolonial conditions. Recent crises, including the COVID-19 pandemic and Russia's invasion of Ukraine, have further complicated science diplomacy on public health, revealing the marginalisation of actors in the Global South. Yet, existing models, practices, and modes of engagement in the Global South may subvert and strategically navigate these neocolonial conditions. How can these models be collated in a dynamic and flexible way such that knowledge gained through new experiences is used iteratively across contexts? How can scientists increase multilateral, interdisciplinary, and transversal partnerships while navigating complex governmental and international structures? For this special issue, we call for papers that demonstrate innovative and flexible models for science diplomacy, with a focus on public health and health promotion policies. We aim to collect evidence across various aspects of public health research which demonstrates the practical role of science diplomacy in the Global South, as well as the structural challenges faced on the ground. While South America and Asia have received scholarly attention, especially in incorporating decolonial thinking and heritage diplomacy, less has been studied in the Middle East and Africa. Moreover, less has been done in framing science diplomacy in terms of neocolonialism in order for its root structure to be constructively challenged. Areas to be covered may include, but are not limited to: • building partnerships among stakeholders across the Global South to ensure practical implementation of public health research. • modes by which scientific research is grounded in local culture and context. • the role of stakeholders in furthering health promotion, including governments, the UN, NGOs, academia, and the private sector. • case studies which balance the participation of researchers from the Global South with the representation of gender, ethnicity, and disability. • positioning researchers as protagonists irrespective of geographies and state hierarchies in the international system. • turning governments' financial power in research into a force for the good rather than a tool of neocolonialism.

Social Learning and Innovation in Contemporary Hunter-Gatherers Hideaki Terashima,Barry S. Hewlett,2016-10-22 This is the first book to examine social learning and innovation in hunter-gatherers from around the world. More is known about social learning in chimpanzees and nonhuman primates than is known about social learning in hunter-gatherers, a way of life that characterized most of human history. The book describes diverse patterns of learning and teaching behaviors in contemporary hunter-gatherers from the perspectives of cultural anthropology, ecological anthropology, biological anthropology, and developmental psychology. The book addresses several theoretical issues including the learning hypothesis which suggests that the fate of Homo sapiens and Neanderthals in the last glacial period might have been due to the differences in learning ability. It has been unequivocally claimed that social learning is intrinsically important for human beings; however, the characteristics of human learning remain under a dense fog despite innumerable studies with children from urban-industrial cultures. Controversy continues on problems such as: do hunter-gatherers teach? If so, what types of teaching occur, who does it, how often, under what contexts, and so on. The book explores the most basic and intrinsic aspects of social learning as well as the foundation of innovative activities in everyday activities of contemporary hunter-gatherer people across the earth. The book examines how hunter-gatherer core values, such as gender and age egalitarianism and extensive sharing of food and childcare are transmitted and acquired by children. Chapters are grouped into five sections: 1) theoretical perspectives of learning in hunter-gatherers, 2) modes and processes of social learning in hunter-gatherers, 3) innovation and cumulative culture, 4) play and other cultural contexts of social learning and innovation, 5) biological contexts of learning and innovation. Ideas and concepts based on the data gathered through an intensive fieldwork by the authors will give much insight into the mechanisms and meanings of learning and education in modern humans.
