Energy and Conflict Prevention Greg Austin,Marie-Ange Schellekens-Gaiffe,2007 Although almost no major war has been exclusively related to the control of an oil or gas field, disputes over hydrocarbon reserves have regularly been an undeniable part of many armed conflicts. Disputes over the use of nuclear energy lie at the heart of several current confrontations that have a high potential to turn into armed conflict. The papers in this volume address the clear need to reduce international tension on energy security issues while addressing the open divides between energy-exporting and energy-importing states and hidden tensions between developed energy importers (North America, Europe and Japan) and emerging energy importers (China, India, developing Asia and Africa). This is a major (though latent) threat not to be ignored by key political and business decision-makers

International Water Security Nevelina I. Pachova,Mikiyasu Nakayama,Libor Jansky,2008 Water is essential for all aspects of life. Managing water is a challenging task, particularly in shared water basins that host more than half of the world's population. National sovereignty and security considerations have long constrained the reasonable, equitable and sustainable utilization of international water courses. With post-Cold War democratization and globalization on the rise, domestic actors have an increasingly important role to play in national decision-making and traditional foreign policy debates. This change entails new threats but also presents new opportunities for ensuring international water security.

Trading on Alliance Security James Cotton,John Ravenhill,2007 Covering the period from 9/11 to the end of 2005, this book charts the Howard government's response to a particularly demanding external environment--in an era when foreign policy issues have had a significant impact on domestic electoral politics. Relations with the US, China, Japan, West Asia, and Southeast Asia are of particular focus.

Investing in Energy Security Risk Mitigation United Nations. Economic Commission for Europe,2008 Developments in the energy markets, particularly for hydrocarbons, over the last decade have contributed to an increased sense of vulnerability among countries about the future availability of reasonable priced energy. As a result, energy security is once again uppermost in the minds of the general public and policymakers. Therefore, investing in future energy sources to meet the growing global demand for energy is likely to remain a major preoccupation of countries for the foreseeable future. The publication addresses challenges facing the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe (UNECE) region in achieving a secure and sustainable energy future. It discusses government roles in energy investment, methods of financing energy projects, performance of national oil companies, and four country case studies, and presents conclusions and recommendations on energy security, including on infrastructure investment and financing.
