Advances in PACU (Post Anesthesia Care Unit) Ahmet Şen,2022 With the term perioperative anaesthesia, it is advocated that anaesthesia should be considered an exhaustive process, especially in major surgeries. The purposes of this process are as follows: in the preoperative period, the patient's preparation is provided in different clinical and psychological ways; in the intraoperative period, hemodynamic, surgical, cardiac, and all systems are protected; and in the postoperative period, the patient is recovered from the anaesthesia, and short-term complications are prevented. In the postoperative period, in terms of patient safety, anaesthesia recovery, and surgical follow-up, it is undoubtedly beneficial to follow up with patients in PACU for the first 24-48 hours before taking them to the service, especially for early complications, prolonged recovery, and close follow-up. PACU, an important constitute of the perioperative process, is also where every risky postoperative patient will be followed. This book aims to examine every stage of the PACU process from a clinical perspective beyond nursing care and support the medical literature. In the book chapters, the expected risks in the patients and those that should be applied clinically in treatment and follow-up processes will be discussed in general.

Hazardous Post Anesthesia Care Unit (PACU) : Reality Or Myth? Marilee Lorraine Edwards,1999 Research has linked various health problems with chronic exposure to anesthetic waste gases. Few studies have explored anesthetic waste gases in the Post Anesthesia Care Unit (PACU). Newer halogenated anesthetic agents such as Sevoflurane and Desflurane have expedient recoveries and theoretically, limit exposure time to waste anesthetic gases in PACU. Exposure of recovery room nurses to Sevoflurane was measured in this descriptive study. Sequential air samples from PACU nurse's breathing space were taken while they administered routine post operative care. The sample included two PACU nurses working day shifts who were assigned to patients only anesthetized with Sevoflurane.

Assessment and Comparison of the Post Anesthesia Care Unit Theory Base in ICU and PACU Nurses Beth Ann Padalino,1996

Post-Anesthesia Care James W. Heitz,2016-08-22 The initial hours after surgery are a critical time in the care of the surgical patient. Familiarity with the clinical presentation of perioperative complications is important to achieving optimal outcomes. By taking an approach to complications based upon signs and symptoms seen in the early post-operative period among adult patients undergoing non-cardiac surgery, this book aids the practitioner in the clinical management of surgical patients during the often turbulent hours after surgery. After a brief introduction to PACU organization, this manual discusses the common and most serious symptoms encountered in the post-operative patient, giving guidance on diagnosis of the underlying disorder and the treatment options available. The book also includes chapters dedicated to subspecialty patients, including patients requiring post-operative mechanical ventilation, pediatric patients, patients with implantable cardiac devices, morbidly obese patients and the complex pain patient. This practical manual is essential reading for all practitioners working in the PACU environment.

Respiratory Management Education for the Post Anesthesia Care Unit Registered Nurse Ashley Jordan

Wilton, 2017 Background: Post anesthesia care unit (PACU) nurses provide patient care during the vulnerable postoperative period when patients are at greatest risk of experiencing respiratory management issues and postoperative pulmonary complications (PPCs). In rural facilities such as Canyon Vista Medical Center (CVMC) in Sierra Vista, Arizona, limited staff and resource shortages can lead to suboptimal patient care conditions in the PACU setting. To compound the issue, PACU nurses in rural facilities rely on facility training and have little guidance on important patient care issues such as post anesthesia respiratory management. Quality improvement initiatives aimed at resolving knowledge deficits in settings such as these can improve both quality and patient safety via a more competent and educated PACU nursing staff. Purpose: To address an educational need among the CVMC PACU nursing staff with the implementation of a post anesthesia respiratory management educational intervention. Methods: A quasi-experimental one group pretest-posttest design using a targeted intervention based upon the knowledge to action (KTA) framework. The PACU setting was used to conduct the intervention with the nurse participants (N = 9). Descriptive statistics and the Wilcoxon signed rank test were used to determine intervention efficacy. Intervention: One 75-minute educational intervention divided into three consecutive phases. Results: A significant improvement in the nurses' knowledge (p

Implementation of a Discharge Checklist in the Post Anesthesia Care Unit (PACU) Mindy Simpson, 2020 With improved technology and shorter procedure times, patients are being discharged from the Post Anesthesia Care Unit (PACU) at earlier in the recovery process. The effects of anesthesia and unclear communication from the healthcare provider can confuse the discharge process. Patients are at risk for poor health outcomes and decreased satisfaction related to their inability to understand discharge instructions after surgical procedures. The goal of the proposed project in this paper was to improve patient care by implementing a standardized discharge checklist in the PACU, improve communication between the nurse and the patient, and ensure all nurses are filling out the discharge checklist.

Decreasing Pain and Length of Stay in the Post Anesthesia Care Unit, (PACU), by Implementing the ASPAN Pain and Comfort Guidelines Chioma N. Nwachukwu, 2012 Poorly managed pain in the immediate postoperative period frequently extends the patient's length of stay in the post anesthesia care unit (PACU) and may lead to increased costs for an organization. Evidence-based clinical practice guidelines are emerging as one means to improve pain management practices. The American Society of PeriAnesthesia Nursing (ASPAN) Pain and Comfort Guidelines were developed to fill the gap for perioperative nursing pain management practices within the perioperative continuum (Krenzischek & Wilson, 2003). The overall objective of this project is to decrease PACU length of stay (LOS), related to pain, by improving the pain management performance of nurses in the PACU through the implementation of the ASPAN Pain and Comfort Guidelines. The specific aims of this project are to: Aim 1: Evaluate the impact of implementing the American Society of PeriAnesthesia Nursing (ASPAN) pain and comfort guidelines in a PACU Aim 2: Compare the differences in patient length LOS stay in the PACU pre and post implementation of the ASPAN pain and comfort guidelines. Aim 3: Determine the cost-effectiveness of implementing the ASPAN pain and comfort guidelines in the PACU This pre and post implementation outcome project was conducted in a hospital that performs surgery on, approximately, 800 patients per month. Descriptive statistics was used to analyze the data obtained from this project. The findings show that the overall pain rating at time of discharge decreased post implementation; increase documentation of patient/family pain management education; and there was a decrease in PACU LOS from 2.95 hours pre-implementation to 1.70hrs post-implementation. Furthermore, expansion of this project may lead to a greater realization in cost savings related to a sustained decrease in the LOS.
