Jim Hargan

The Blue Ring Assassin Keith K. Millheim, 2020-06-12 Zoe Waring-Quinn is unique--half Australian aborigine and half Irish Australian, a PhD expert in venomous sea life, and she assassinates bad people. But her dual life is turned upside down when she meets the last living kadaitcha (aborigine mystic) man and his totem a ten-meter salt water crocodile called the Great One. Upon returning from a field trip Dr. Zoe Waring-Quinn learns her father had been killed by a hit and run drunk driver who is a Australian Senator. He is exonerated by the courts for lack of physical evidence, but not by Zoe. She sends the Senator to an excruciating death. But Zoe isn't done. She decides the justice system is broken and resolves to keep removing bad people. Homicide Detective Saul Alpert, who is on her trail, offers her the opportunity to join a mysterious assassination organization that removes people for money. Otherwise he will see her behind bars. To make things worse she finds herself whisked away by an aborigine mystic, Bill Gidgiwarra, to a remote part of Western Australia where he introduces her to a frightful giant ten-meter salt water crocodile. Is it a dream or is it real? Zoe feels like she's fallen down the rabbit hole and has become Zoe-in-Wonderland. The story expands to her surreal world of assassination and her being able to dream travel, which could either help her or kill her.

Hunting from Home: A Year Afield in the Blue Ridge Mountains Christopher Camuto, 2003-03-17 Hunting from Home is the culmination of a long and thoughtful journey through the rich natural landscape of the southern Appalachians. A vivid rendering of the four seasons on a Shenandoah Valley farm and in the Virginia mountains. Christopher Camuto has been praised for writing with the clear-sightedness and imaginative reach both inward and outward of a poet (Verlyn Klinkenborg). In Hunting from Home, Camuto takes the reader through a year of intense experiences: hunting grouse with his setter through snowbound forests in winter; wading trout streams in spring; closely observing birds and wildlife through summer; exploring the backcountry, cutting wood, and hunting deer in autumn. He takes seriously and joyously Thoreau's injunction to practice the discipline of looking always at what is to be seen. Camuto writes incisively about the hunter's paradoxical love of the game he pursues; but he also hunts in the broadest sense possible, searching out and witnessing the life of the things he loves: brook trout and black bear, hawks and warblers with the hope of sharing the pleasures and preoccupations of a border life lived, with deep satisfaction, in the shadow of the Blue Ridge. 4 b/w illustrations.
