Therefore, the fundamental goal of a corporation is to maximise the wealth of its owners via the purchase, financing, and administration of a wide range of different assets. The goal for financial managers like Solomon Ezra and J. John Pringle is to make the most of their capital money as efficiently as possible. For a company's Financial Management department to operate smoothly, the funds necessary for that purpose must be obtained and used in the most efficient manner possible. Financial Management is concerned with the procurement and financing of long- and short-term credit for the company's operations. In order to do this, it handles a broad variety of concerns, including asset allocation, liability selection, and the size of the organisation. When making these decisions, consideration is given to funding flows and the effects of those flows on management. The capacity of a corporation to compete in today's global economy is dependent on its ability to generate financial resources. All forms of business endeavours need the use of financial resources to succeed. The lifeblood of a business organisation is referred to in this manner as well.
