La canne à sucre, les industries du sucre et du rhum à la Martinique Jean-François Ferré, 1976 En dépit d'une superficie réduite, 1100 km², la Martinique a été dès le début de sa colonisation un des joyaux économiques de l'Empire Colonial

Français. La canne à sucre y a tout de suite occupé les meilleures terres, accaparé la plupart des activités humaines et fondé à une civilisation originale basée sur l'esclavage de la main-d'oeuvre noire. Le Sucre, puis à partir du XIX^{ème} siècle, le Rhum ont considérablement enrichi l'aristocratie des Grands Planteurs blancs alors que la suppression de l'esclavage en 1848 n'a fait que créer un petit paysannat souvent misérable. En 1946, date de la départementalisation, l'île à sucre offre toujours l'exemple parfait du système des Plantations de naguère : emprise foncière de la grande Habitation Sucrière aux mains des Békès (blancs - créoles) située dans la plaine et groupée autour de l'Usine. La petite exploitation émiettée et dispersée est réfugiée sur les mornes environnants apportant à la fois un complément de ravitaillement à la Sucrierie et ses bras au Centre agricole de la plaine. Après le second conflit mondial, la reprise économique s'effectue normalement mais très rapidement, au début des années soixante, la réduction des surfaces plantées et des tonnages manipulés entraînent une chute de la production de sucre et un tassement de l'industrie rhumière. Ce mouvement, à peine enrayé de nos jours, aboutit à la perte de la suprématie de la canne à sucre dans l'île au profit de la banane. Plante à la fois rustique et peu exigeante, la canne à sucre demande essentiellement chaleur et humidité. Toutefois, une culture spéculative tendant à devenir de plus en plus scientifique, il s'avère que la Martinique offre beaucoup d'entraves physiques et techniques au développement d'une culture moderne de la canne à sucre. Si les sols volcaniques sont riches, leur topographie mouvementée est un obstacle à la mécanisation des travaux agricoles. Par ailleurs, l'irrégularité climatique a un effet néfaste sur le tonnage récolté ou bien la richesse en sucre des cannes. Mais c'est surtout la survie de pratiques archaïques qui pénalise cette activité : la multiplication des travaux manuels, surtout en temps de récolte, entraîne une élévation des prix de revient à une époque où la main d'œuvre coûte cher. Le retard des méthodes culturales, le sous-équipement des Usines, la désaffection pour les tâches rurales sont autant de handicaps à affronter. Devant ces problèmes, une politique de relance de la canne à sucre en Martinique a été effectuée depuis une dizaine d'années : outre les nombreuses aides financières accordées à la profession, elle s'articule avant tout autour du Centre Technique de la Canne et du Sucre (C.T.C.S.), maître d'oeuvre d'une modernisation totale des opérations du champ à la sucrierie. plus spécifiquement les interventions de la S.A.T.E.C. (Société d'Aide Technique et de Coopération) et de la Réforme Foncière s'adressent aux petits producteurs. Si la canne à sucre ne joue plus les premiers rôles dans l'île, elle totalise toutefois encore 7000 ha de plantations et demeure une monoculture dans la grande plaine du Lamentin, le bassin de la rivière Galion ou de la région de Sainte Marie. Elle constitue par ailleurs un appoint non négligeable pour 2 000 petits planteurs et l'activité d'une vingtaine de distilleries agricoles originalité de l'île, lui est redevable. Outre la nécessité de la réussite du Plan de Relance, l'avenir de la canne à sucre en Martinique est liée à des impératifs commerciaux. Pour le sucre, la production bénéficie d'un marché contingenté dans le cadre communautaire (Europe des Neuf) et national ; le quota alloué à l'île est loin d'être atteint. Le rhum lui ne bénéficie pas de la politique agricole communautaire. La politique et les producteurs antillais ne peuvent que compter, outre le marché local limité, que sur la consommation métropolitaine aujourd'hui stagnante. Dans ces conditions, la profession s'attarde à défendre un accompagnement un projet de Règlement Alcool conservant 'intégrité du rhum traditionnel, en Europe, quitte à prévoir parallèlement un rhum de type européen répondant mieux au goût du consommateur allemand entre autres
