Living and Health Conditions of Selected Cities in India Srinivas Goli,2013 The concept of "healthy city" promotes the physical, mental, social, and environmental well-being of people who live and work in urban areas. Fostering sustainably healthy cities is the prime objective of the National Urban Health Mission (NUHM) in India. However, attaining this goal requires establishing priorities, key concerns, strategies and guidelines for action. This paper aims to assist policymakers by providing critical insights into the health and living conditions in selected major cities in India, with special emphasis on slums. This paper presents evidence that many of India's major cities face significant deficits in the provision of basic amenities, including shelter, safe drinking water, improved sanitation and electricity. Demographic and health conditions in these cities lag far behind the goals set forth in national policies almost a decade ago. Despite the apparent proximity of city dwellers to urban health facilities, less than one third of the urbanites in India utilize government health facilities.

India's Five Year Plans M. M. Sury,Niti Bhasin,Vibha Mathur,2008 ABOUT THE BOOK Part I of this work explains the processes and procedures of economic planning in India, focusing on institutional framework, mechanism of transferring resources from the Centre to the States for plan purposes, objectives of planning and an assessment of achievements. Parts II to XIII of the book contain edited extracts from Final Plan Documents from First Five Year Plan (1951-52 to 1955-56) to Eleventh Five Year Plan (2007-08 to 2011-12). These have been categorised into the following 12 theme headings: ? Agriculture, Land Reforms, Co-operatives and Allied Sectors ? Industry, Infrastructure, Public Sector and Small Industries ? Development and Management of Extractive Industries (Mineral Resources) ? Electricity, Coal, Petroleum and other Energy Sources ? Urban Development and Housing ? Transport and Communications ? Employment and Labour Welfare ? Health and Family Welfare ? Education and Training ? Science and Technology ? Social Welfare ? Development of North Eastern States, Hill Areas, Tribal Areas and Other Measures for Balanced Regional Development Editorial comments are given at the beginning of each theme heading. Reader will find it easy to comprehend how a particular sector of the Indian economy was treated in terms of priority, strategy, and allocation of resources in the successive Plans. The 12 theme headings cover almost all the sectors of the Indian economy. Part XIV contains sector-wise statistical data on the Indian economy (1950-51 to 2006-07) which would be useful for a cross-section of academic community and researchers, both in India and abroad. This work, it is hoped, would prove useful for the students of economics, commerce, public administration and business management. An understanding of the mechanics of economic planning will also serve the needs of legislators, administrators and those in industry and trade.
