Ruggero Taradel

L'accusa del sangue Ruggero Taradel, 2002 Reconstructs the history of blood libels throughout the centuries, from the accusation of ritual murder in antiquity to the murder of Polish Jewish Holocaust survivors in 1946. Blood libels are myths that evolve in particular historical contexts; an analysis of their political, religious, and economic aspects is essential for a further understanding of their diffusion. These factors were central to the use of the blood libel by some dominant secular and ecclesiastic groups for propagandistic goals. Criticizes use of psychohistory to explain the psychological aspects of blood libels; such interpretations absolve persons and institutions from historical, ethical, and political responsibility.
