At Home With the Horrors Sammy Scott, 2022-06-14 Just when you thought it was safe to go home again... In this chilling collection of short fiction, Sammy Scott dares you to explore the horrors that are lurking behind your front door. In Katherine, a lonely woman finds an unlikely companion when she discovers that her new house is haunted. A couple's mundane argument quickly evolves into a night of terror in What We Have Here. A harried wife finds herself the victim of her husband's pranks when he launches a YouTube channel titled Scared Mary. An antisocial teenager encounters a mysterious new world when he begins looking into the windows of his neighbors' homes in Peeping Tommy. A mourning widow is forced to relive her husband's death when he calls her daily on her cell phone in Theresa. In People You May Know, a happily married man turns his life upside-down when he sends a Facebook friend request to an old college flame that no longer remembers him. A woman sets a trap for her runaway cat and is horrified to find that she has captured Something Else Entirely. And in the concluding novella Emil Bones, a librarian regrets the day she reads a mysterious little book left behind in the library's drop box. Exploring both the natural and the supernatural, the alien and the ghostly, the chilling and the horrific, these fourteen diversions first root themselves in the mundanity of everyday life before extending their branches into the very things and ideas that terrify us all. In At Home with the Horrors, Scott brings the nightmares to the one place where we should all feel the safest, and when it comes to horror, he proves that grief, loss, and guilt can be just as terrifying as ghosts and goblins.

At Home and under Fire Susan R. Grayzel, 2012-01-09 Although the Blitz has come to symbolize the experience of civilians under attack, Germany first launched air raids on Britain at the end of 1914 and continued them during the First World War. With the advent of air warfare, civilians far removed from traditional battle zones became a direct target of war rather than a group shielded from its impact. This is a study of how British civilians experienced and came to terms with aerial warfare during the First and Second World Wars. Memories of the World War I bombings shaped British responses to the various real and imagined war threats of the 1920s and 1930s, including the bombing of civilians during the Spanish Civil War and, ultimately, the Blitz itself. The processes by which different constituent bodies of the British nation responded to the arrival of air power reveal the particular role that gender played in defining civilian participation in modern war.

The Chinese at Home and Abroad Willard B. Farwell,1885 Important, if highly bigoted, early study of the Chinese in California and the West, with discussion of the opium problem in San Francisco, leprosy, Chinatown in Sacramento, attacks on the Chinese in Wyoming and Washington, the 'Chinese Question, ' the need for missionary work, the Chinese and the Central Pacific Railroad, Chinese capitalists, and more. Farwell professed to want to inform the public about Chinese manners and customs in general before turning his focus to a bigoted discussion of the negative qualities that he ascribed to the Chinese people and the negative effects that he suggested those qualities would have on American society. The map mirrors the bias against the Chinese in California with its focus on vice: buildings are identified individually and are color-coded to show gambling houses, opium dens, and places of prostitution (with white and Chinese brothels coded separately).
