Proceedings of the 27th International Symposium on Advancement of Construction Management and Real Estate Jing Li, Weisheng Lu, Yi Peng, Hongping Yuan, Daikun Wang, 2023-08-07 This book presents the proceedings of CRIOCM 2022 (27th International Conference on Advancement of Construction Management and Real Estate), sharing the latest developments in real estate and construction management around the globe. The conference was organized by the Chinese Research Institute of Construction Management (CRIOCM) working in close collaboration with The Chinese University of Hong Kong. Written by international academics and professionals, the book discusses the latest achievements, research findings, and advances in frontier disciplines in the field of construction management and real estate. Covering a wide range of topics, including spatial planning and land use innovation, integration and application of BIM and GIS, low-carbon built environment, post-pandemic resilient cities development, housing and social governance, real estate market and urban policy, real estate finance and economics, intelligent construction and smart city, built environment for healthy living, and construction management in the post-COVID-19 era, the discussions provide valuable insights into the implementation of advanced construction project management and real estate market in China and abroad. The book offers an outstanding resource for academics and professionals

Diversity and Society Joseph F. Healey, Andi Stepnick, 2022-11-22 Of the challenges confronting the United States today, those relating to diversity continue to be among the most urgent and the most daunting. Americans value equality, freedom, and justice. However, discrimination, rejection of others, racism, and sexism are also part of our national heritage. Every part of our society, and virtually every item on the national agenda-welfare and health care, policing, crime and punishment, family, education, defense, foreign policy, and terrorism-have some connection with dominant-minority relations. This textbook contributes to our ongoing national discussion by presenting information, raising questions, and deeply examining relevant issues. Our goal is to help you increase your knowledge, improve your understanding of the issues, and clarify your thinking about social inequalities related to race, ethnicity, gender, class, and other inequalities. We've written for undergraduate students-sociology majors and non-majors alike. We make few assumptions about students' knowledge of history or sociological concepts, and we try to present the material in a way that you'll find relevant and easy to understand. For example, we use a unified set of themes and concepts throughout the book. Our analysis is consistent and continuous, even as we examine multiple sociological perspectives and different points of view. We introduce most of the conceptual framework in the first four chapters. Then, in Chapters 5 through 8, we apply these concepts and analytical themes to a series of minority groups (e.g., African Americans, Native Americans). Chapter 9 examines immigrant groups that are relatively new to the United States. Finally, in Chapter 10, we review and summarize our main points, conclude our analysis, and speculate about the future. Thus, this text follows an explicit structure: introduction (Part 1), application and development (Parts 2 and 3), and conclusion (Part 4). We hope that this organization will help you follow the thrust of our analysis and recognize the complexity of group relations, inequality, and conflict. Our analysis is, generally, macro and comparative. That is, we focus on large groups and social structures-such as social institutions and stratification systems. We systematically compare the experiences and situations of America's many minority groups over time. The book follows in the tradition of conflict theory, but it isn't a comprehensive statement of that tradition. We introduce and apply other perspectives, but we don't attempt to give equal attention to all current sociological paradigms, explain everything, or include all possible analytical points of view. It couldn't be done! Rather, our goals are (a) to present the sociology of minority group relations in a way that's understandable and intellectually challenging and (b) to address the issues (and tell the stories behind the issues) in a way that is interesting and that shows the power and importance of sociological thinking--

International Encyclopedia of Business Management, 2025-09-01 The Encyclopedia of Business Management, Four Volume Set is a comprehensive resource that covers over 200 topics across various areas of business management. Each entry is written in an accessible manner, making complex concepts easy to understand. The encyclopedia addresses interdisciplinary subjects such as cultural entrepreneurship, tourism innovation, and marketing promotions. By emphasizing definitions and practical applications, the entries help readers grasp the relevance of each topic. Expert editors lead each section, ensuring that the contributions are authoritative and well-rounded. The encyclopedia is divided into seven broad themes, including business entrepreneurship, human resource management, innovation management, international business, organizational behavior, project management, supply chain management, and sport and tourism management. Each section's articles begin with a technical analysis of key definitional issues, followed by an exploration of the topic's broader context. This structured approach provides a holistic examination of the subjects, allowing readers to gain a comprehensive understanding of vital business management concepts. - Provides a comprehensive overview of the main business management topics - Focuses specifically on business management from a range of perspectives - Includes new and emerging business management topics - Presents an interdisciplinary focus in terms of business management practices - Features templates across all chapters for ease of navigation and use

Race, Ethnicity, Gender, and Class Joseph F. Healey, Andi Stepnick, 2023-01-12 Known for its clear and engaging writing, the bestselling Race, Ethnicity, Gender, and Class: The Sociology of Group Conflict and Change has been thoroughly updated to be fresher, more relevant, and more accessible to undergraduates. The text uses sociological perspectives and a consistent conceptual framework to tell the story of America's minority groups, today and throughout history. By presenting information, asking questions, and examining controversies, it demonstrates that understanding what it means to be an American has always required us to grapple with issues of diversity and difference. This title is accompanied by a complete teaching and learning package.

Traditional motives for development cooperation. An evaluation of Chinese development politics Loris

Kempchen, 2015-09-07 Bachelor Thesis from the year 2015 in the subject Politics - Topic: Development Politics, grade: 1,7, University of Potsdam (Wirtschafts- und Sozialwissenschaftliche Fakultät), language: English, abstract: Since the end of WWII and the movement towards independence of former colonies, development cooperation has become an important issue for world governments as well as for academicians. Different theories about the causation of development and underdevelopment have emerged since the 1950's and have been the subject of fervent discussions within the academic community. A multitude of theories and approaches have been the result of these discussions and can be used to understand development and its related implications. This thesis will provide an overview of the most relevant theories of development and show how they are the product of their respective time. The works of the most influential authors of the respective theories will support the theoretical discussion in order to offer the framework for the deduction of motives. This thesis focuses only on the theories that examine state or actors behavior in development cooperation in general, in order to elucidate the motives of these states or actors. A y-centered research approach (Gerring, 2006) has been used in order to answer the following question: "Can China's motives for development cooperation be explained by the models of the classical theories of development?" The dependent variable (y) is China's motives and the independent variables (x1, 2, 3, 4, n) are the motives derived from the classical theories. This paper investigates whether there is a correlation between these traditional motives and the Chinese motives or whether the Chinese motivations cannot be explained by the classical theories. The last part of this thesis is a discussion of the following hypothesis, which reflects my research questions and the relationship of the variables: Chinese motives highly correlate with the motives described by traditional development theories. The comparison, that has been deduced, might not be immediately evident to the reader, seeing that this is a comparison of motives derived from a theoretical discussion (chapter 2 and 3), with motives that were derived from empirical observations (chapter 4).

The Nexus of Tax Education and Compliance Among Small Business Enterprises Cosmas Mwanza,Victor

Katoma,2019-12-20 Academic Paper from the year 2019 in the subject Business economics - Accounting and Taxes, , course: Tax compliance, language: English, abstract: The study set out to investigate the influence of tax education on tax compliance. It unearthed a lacuna between tax education and tax compliance which indicated an interplay between the theories of economic deterrent, reasoned action and the theory of planned behavior. Tax non-compliance was attributed to unfairness, dishonesty by colleagues submitting incorrect tax returns, and the complexity of the tax system and tax forms. The issue of tax compliance from SMEs in developing countries has remained a blighting problem for a long time. Despite tax education being diagnosed as the panacea for improving tax compliance from small business owners, the situation has not changed. A divide regarding the issue of tax education as influencing the collection of tax from SMEs still exists among researchers. Some scholars indicate a positive effect of tax education on compliance and others view tax education as a recipe for propagating tax evasion. However, for developmental projects to improve the lives of the citizenry, educating tax-payers aims to improve revenue collection from this category of business people. This study employed an exploratory concurrent mixed research approach on 98 SMEs operating within the Ojtiwarongo district.
