An Investigation of the Relationship Between Value Chain Activities and Generic Strategies in Small and Medium-sized Enterprises in UK Manufacturing Antonios Michail, 2011-12 Doctoral Thesis / Dissertation from the year 2011 in the subject Business economics - Business Management, Corporate Governance, University of Central Lancashire, language: English, abstract: In this study an in depth investigation of successful competitive strategies for small to medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) is undertaken. The overall aim of this study is to analyse the strategic orientation of UK Manufacturing SMEs. In the process, it will test Porter's (1980, 1985) theoretical framework of generic strategies and thus evaluate firms' preferred strategic synthesis. It will, therefore, test the efficacy of the value chain and develop any specific pattern that relates to a combination strategy. The investigation of the above objectives is undertaken utilising a mixed research methodology with the purpose of examining the applicability of existing competitive strategy frameworks (phase 1) and testing a new theoretical framework that incorporates additional dimensions of strategy (phase 2). During phase 1, Porter's framework is employed to investigate SMEs' strategic orientation as a means to achieve sustainable competitive advantage. A semi-structured questionnaire is employed and the analysis is carried out by means of factor and cluster analysis to identify strategic variables currently employed by SMEs. During phase 2, the theoretical framework is operationalised to bridge the gap within the literature and existing empirical research. Its purpose is to identify forms of successful competitive strategies of UK MSMEs as they are formulated and implemented in firms' value chain activities. The data was collected through a number of semi-structured interviews and the analysis was based on data categorisation. The findings indicate that Porter's (1980) single generic strategies are not the best option for UK MSMEs for gaining competitive advantage and that the competitive strategy of successful MSMEs differs from that of the less successful ones. Future Firms Eric J. Bolland, Charles W. Hofer, 1998 This book is a close examination of the business side of high technology firms. Which innovative technologies are important to the success of start-up firms, as well as mature firms, equally important is an attention to the ways that the businesses are run. If the business is not managed well, the firm will likely fail in spite of innovative technology. Since the field of high technology is characterized by many start-up firms, the book examines how entrepreneurs with innovative ideas go about beginning a business. It looks at the nature and backgrounds of those who start the businesses, the sources of financing they secure to get the businesses going, the strategies they employ in building their firms, and the factors that can lead to long-term success. The book also explores how established firms react to competitive pressures from a rapidly changing marketplace and how they remain innovative and competitive. Government can play a role in creating conditions that are conducive to vital high technology industries and the book discusses public policies that can contribute to a thriving industrial sector.
