Hodgkin's Disease Worldwide Stefano Parodi, Stagnaro Emanuele, 2009-01-01 Hodgkin's disease, sometimes called Hodgkin's lymphoma, is a cancer that starts in lymphatic tissue. Lymphatic tissue includes the lymph nodes and related organs that are part of the body's immune and blood-forming systems. The lymph nodes are small, bean-shaped organs found underneath the skin in the neck, underarm, and groin. They are also found in many other places in the body such as inside the chest, abdomen, and pelvis. Lymph nodes make and store infection-fighting white blood cells, called lymphocytes. They are connected throughout the body by lymph vessels (narrow tubes similar to blood vessels). These lymph vessels carry a colourless, watery fluid (lymphatic fluid) that contains lymphocytes. Eventually the lymphatic fluid is emptied into the blood vessels in the left upper chest. There are 5 different types of Hodgkin's lymphoma: Nodular sclerosing Hodgkin's lymphoma. Mixed cellularity Hodgkin's lymphoma. * Lymphocyte depletion Hodgkin's lymphoma.* Lymphocyte-rich classical Hodgkin's lymphoma. * Nodular lymphocyte-predominant Hodgkin's lymphoma. This new book is an important addition to the literature in the field.

Disorders of the Lymph Nodes and Related Organs Nancy L. Harris, Peter M. Banks, Elaine Sarkin Jaffe, 1994 This volume presents 20 cases to illustrate the major types of malignant lymphomas, as well as selected non-neoplastic lesions and nonlymphoid malignancies, that may be encountered by surgical pathologists in the diagnosis of lymph nodes and related organs. Examples include Hodgkin's disease, B cell lymphomas, and T cell lymphomas, involving lymph nodes and extranodal sites. An immunologic and functional approach to classification is stressed, and the utility of immunologic and molecular genetic techniques in diagnosis and classification is illustrated where relevant.
