How to Dermaplane at Home Dr Lora Lewis,2021-10-31 A DETAILED GUIDE ON DERMAPLANING AT HOME

Dermaplaning sessions may turn out to be expensive depending on the clinic or salon you opt as well as the number of sessions required. An economic & effective way is to dermaplane at home. If you ever ask a dermatologist about dermaplaning at home, the answer will usually be no. That's not because it's unsafe to do so or wouldn't fetch expected results. Of course, you may not have the exact same results as a professional treatment but that's no good reason to not try it at home! Professionals will always advise on seeing them for dermaplaning treatments. However, you can easily dermaplane at home with a little effort and a good dermaplaning tool. An added benefit of doing this at home is that it is cost-effective and has high utility. Dermaplaning at home is the easiest way to get smooth, hair-free skin. All you need is a good dermaplaning tool. Because dermaplaning focuses on the exfoliation of the skin's surface, it's crucial that you begin with clean skin. It is imperative to remove all makeup, oils, and moisturizers to have clean, bare skin for the treatment. A gentle skin cleanser to fully remove dirt, oil, bacteria, and makeup from the skin. staying away from oil based cleansers is recommend, as they tend to leave an extra layer on the skin. Depending on how much makeup you wear, it may be necessary to do a double cleanse to ensure your treatment targets the vellus hairs and does not simply remove excess makeup. Be sure to use a gentle cleanser, not a physical exfoliator, beforehand, as the latter may irritate sensitive skin. Ready to self-demplane? Get this book by Dr. Lora Lewis now and start dermaplaning at home
