Aya Takano

Synesthesia Aya Takano, 2022-11-08 Pop art and manga join forces in this highly anticipated monograph Painter, illustrator, sci-fi writer, and manga artist Aya Takano is one of the main artists of Kaikai Kiki, the artistic production studio created in 2001 by Takashi Murakami. Inspired by all art forms--ranging from erotic stamps of the Edo Period to Impressionism and from Osamu Tezuka to Gustav Klimt--the artist has built a universe all her own. A universe that is made of infinite worlds, and all a means of escaping reality, gravity, and its restraints to ultimately attain a certain form of transcendence. Synesthesia, her first monograph, explores all the layers of her multifaceted career.

Cacophony on Canvas Kathryn Zarembo, 2012 Cacophony on Canvas exposes the extraordinary world of Synesthesia: a joining or overlap of the senses in the brain. The exhibition will illustrate the correlation between people with synesthesia and art. It will stimulate the visitors own ability to combine their senses - to think more abstractly - and to experience a world with eyes that hear and ears that see.

Synesthesia Source Wikipedia, 2013-09 Please note that the content of this book primarily consists of articles available from Wikipedia or other free sources online. Pages: 27. Chapters: List of people with synesthesia, Synesthesia in art, Netochka Nezvanova, History of synesthesia research, Synesthesia in literature, Grapheme-color synesthesia, Neural basis of synesthesia, Richard Cytowic, Wednesday Is Indigo Blue, Ordinal linguistic personification, Synesthesia in fiction, American Synesthesia Association, The Man Who Tasted Shapes, Number form, Lexical-gustatory synesthesia, Jacob Isaacson, Chromesthesia, Optophonic Piano, UK Synaesthesia Association, Belgian Synesthesia Association. Excerpt: Synesthesia (also spelled synaesthesia or synaesthesia, plural synesthesiae or synaesthesiae), from the ancient Greek (syn), together, and (aisthesis), sensation, is a neurologically based condition in which stimulation of one sensory or cognitive pathway leads to automatic, involuntary experiences in a second sensory or cognitive pathway. People who report such experiences are known as synesthetes. In one common form of synesthesia, known as grapheme color synesthesia or color-graphemic synesthesia, letters or numbers are perceived as inherently colored, while in ordinal linguistic personification, numbers, days of the week and months of the year evoke personalities. In spatial-sequence, or number form synesthesia, numbers, months of the year, and/or days of the week elicit precise locations in space (for example, 1980 may be farther away than 1990), or may have a (three-dimensional) view of a year as a map (clockwise or counterclockwise). Yet another recently identified type, visual motion sound synesthesia, involves hearing sounds in response to visual motion and flicker. Over 60 types of synesthesia have been reported, but only a fraction have been evaluated by scientific research. Even within one type, synesthetic perceptions vary in intensity and people vary in awareness of their..

What Sound Does a Color Make? Kathleen Forde, 2005 Explores the subject of synesthesia in contemporary electronic art, where sound and visual stimuli seemingly fuse together in immersive sensory environments. Connecting recent developments in digital audiovisual art to their predigital roots, this exhibition provokes a renewed awareness of human cognition and perception through a selection of compelling works by an international group of artists.

Seeing Beyond the Visual Melanie Schnidrig, 2016

IMPOSSIBLE ART Vanessa Loh, 2023 This dissertation investigates the turn of the century fascination with synesthesia and efforts by Modernist artists and writers to produce cross-modal works that attempt to defy sensory boundaries. Works of impossible art are artistic and literary experiments with style and form that develop out of the realism and naturalism of the nineteenth century, to be sure; they are also conceived of by their creators as scientific experiments that test what is possible at the limits of perception. Accordingly, while my work is situated within the field of aesthetics, I take a neuroscientific approach to aid in understanding the modes of perception these works are attempting to explore. My project applies the findings of recent neuroscientific studies into clinical synesthesia as a guide for thinking about these Modernist works. The methodology of neuro-aesthetics allows me to develop a theory of sensory mimesis. Sensory mimesis is a holistic approach to explaining phenomenological experience that depends on a sensory semantics, more fundamental and more comprehensive than a linguistic semantics, that I propose filters our access to the world. What we ultimately learn from impossible art is that the range of neurodiversity in humans is broader than we tend acknowledge or appreciate. The notoriously indefinable and uncategorizable character of queer theory is an applicable framework to match the innumerable neurocognitive possibilities that are actually available. To this end, my dissertation suggests that a shift to a neuro-queer-aesthetic paradigm would not only expand human perceptive possibilities, but also enable compassionate engagement within and among our diverse communities.
