Victorian Subtidal Reef Monitoring Program Matt Edmunds, 2012 Shallow reef habitats cover extensive areas along the Victorian coast and are dominated by seaweeds, mobile invertebrates and fishes. These reefs are known for their high biological complexity, species diversity and productivity. They also have significant economic value through commercial and recreational fishing, diving and other tourism activities. To effectively manage and conserve these important and biologically rich habitats, the Victorian Government has established a long-term Subtidal Reef Monitoring Program (SRMP). Over time the SRMP will provide information on the status of Victorian reef flora and fauna and determine the nature and magnitude of trends in species populations and species diversity through time. The SRMP is established throughout Victoria. This report describes the monitoring of the Beware Reef Marine Sanctuary and reference sites, involving four surveys from 2004 to 2011--Executive summary.
