A Genetic Study of the Saker Falcon, Falco Cherrug Caroline A. Metcalf, 2003

Home Range Characteristics of Breeding Saker Falcons (Falco Cherrug) at Artificial Nest Sites in Central Mongolia Yozora Leal, 2018 Understanding the movements of saker falcons (Falco cherrug) is directly relevant to the success and overall conservation efforts of this endangered species, as it is essential to develop an understanding of the space requirements the falcons need to successfully reproduce. This thesis documents my investigations of saker falcon home ranges in an artificial nest project in the steppe of central Mongolia. This research is part of a larger research project, which is designed to provide information on the movements and breeding success of saker falcons, and to study the population genetics and population recruitment of this species across Mongolia. I used data collected from breeding adult saker falcons in an artificial nesting area in 2009 and 2010 to determine the species' home range characteristics. A total of 10 breeding adults were evaluated with two returning in 2010. Using 22 g Argos/global positioning system (GPS) solar platform transmitter terminal (PTT) units, I tracked their movements and estimated their home ranges using the Brownian bridge movement model (BBMM) and then mapped them in ArcGIS. These home range estimates were defined at 50% (core home range extent) and 95% (total home range extent). Home range areas ranged from 7.05 km² to 4,365.28 km² (median = 37.16 km²) using 95% BBMM, and from 0.78 km² to 546.39 km² (median = 7.43 km²) using 50% BBMM. No statistically significant differences in area were found between male or female home ranges (50%BBMM - $W = 8$, $p\text{-value} = 1$, 95%BBMM - $W = 7$, $p\text{-value} = 1$). Overlap between two home ranges were calculated on a scale of 0-1, the smaller the value, the less overlap between home ranges. Most values calculated were small, indicating minimal overlap (only 1 value was above 0.5 for 50% BBMM). This result supports my hypothesis that the falcons may exhibit territoriality with minimal overlap between home ranges. However, contrary to my prediction, male and female home ranges did not differ significantly despite different sex roles between parents during the breeding season.--Boise State University ScholarWorks.

Problematic Wildlife Francesco M. Angelici,2015-12-18 This book provides insight into the instances in which wildlife species can create problems. Some species trigger problems for human activities, but many others need humans to save them and to continue to exist. The text addresses issues faced by economists and politicians dealing with laws involving actions undertaken to resolve the problems of the interaction between humans and wildlife. Here, the words 'problematic species' are used in their broadest sense, as may be appreciated in the short introductions to the various sections. At times, the authors discuss special cases while always extending the discussion into a more general and broad vision. At others, they present real cutting-edge analysis of ecological topics and issues. The book will be of interest to biologists, ecologists and wildlife managers involved in research on wildlife, parks, and environmental management, as well as to government departments and agencies, NGOs and conservation wildlife organizations. Even those in contact with nature, such as hunters, herders, and farmers, will be able to find a great deal of important information. Specific case studies are selected from among the most significant and prevalent cases throughout the world. A total of 26 papers have been selected for this book, written by zoologists, biologists and ecologists. Many have an interdisciplinary approach, with contributions by economists, criminologists, technical specialists, and engineers.

Conservation of the Saker Falcon in the Carpathian Basin, 2006-2010 János Bagyura, József Fidlóczky, Mátyás Prommer, LIFE (Organization), 2010* The Saker Falcon (Falco cherrug Gray 1834) is a typical bird species found in open areas, steppes, and semi-deserts. It reaches its westernmost distribution range in the Carpathian Basin. The global population of this 'noble' raptor species -- it plays an important role in Hungarian legends as 'turul' -- is estimated to be six-eight thousand pairs. However, the number of pairs is decreasing throughout the distribution range of the species (except for in the Carpathian Basin). It is especially important to conserve the Hungarian-Slovak populations. In regard to the conservation aim above, between 2006 and 2010 an extensive Hungarian-Slovak Saker conservation programme was implemented. This was led by Bükk National Park Directorate, involving 16 partners and using the financial support of the European Union's LIFE-Nature programme.--Introduction, p. [1]
