Global Advertising in a Global Culture Thomas H. P. Gould,2015-12-16 Globalization stems from many sources, but as Thomas Gould makes clear, advertising is a primary driver of trans-global cultural change. Gould argues that advertising often carries unfiltered and unblocked cultural messages in addition to commercial speech; as such, it not only builds consumer demand to open new markets but also changes consumer expectations and values. At the same time, the evolution of increasingly targeted mobile and social marketing is transforming local and regional cultures into a new mix of global branding and individualized micro-space. Gould examines how advertising professionals negotiate these rocky and quickly-changing cultural terrains. He also explores how advertising—an increasingly global form of communication—is becoming a platform for change at the individual level, and as a direct consequence, at the social and political levels.

Towards the Next Generation of 3D Reconstruction Johan Edstedt, 2025-09-11 Humans perceive our visual surroundings through the projection of light rays through our pupils and onto the retina. Aided by motion, we gain an understanding of our environment, as well as our location within it. The goal of image-based 3D reconstruction is to imbue machines with similar capabilities. The most prominent paradigm for image-based 3D reconstruction is called Structure-from-Motion (SfM). Traditionally, SfM has been approached through handcrafted algorithms, which are brittle when assumptions do not hold. Humans, on the other hand, understand their environment intuitively and show remarkable robustness in their ability to localize themselves in, and map the world. The main purpose of this thesis is the development of a set of methods which strives toward the next generation of SfM, imbued with intelligence and robustness. In particular, we propose a set of methods dealing with 2D: learning of keypoint detectors, features, and dense feature matching, and 3D: threshold-robust relative pose estimation, and registration of SfM maps. First, we develop models to detect keypoints, producing a set of 2D image coordinates, and models to describe the image, producing features. One of our key contributions is decoupling these tasks, which have typically been learned jointly, into distinct objectives, resulting in major gains in performance, as well as increased modularity. Paper A introduces this decoupled framework, and Paper B further develops the keypoint objective. In Paper C we revisit the keypoint objective from an entirely self-supervised reinforcement learning perspective, yielding several insights, and further gains in performance. We further develop methods for dense feature matching, i.e., matching every pixel between two images. In Paper D we propose the first dense feature matcher capable of outperforming sparse matching for relative pose estimation. This is significant, as previous work had generally indicated that the sparse or semi-dense paradigm was preferable. In Paper E we greatly improve on almost all components of the method of Paper D, resulting in an extremely robust dense matcher, capable of matching almost any pair of images. We lift our eyes from the 2D image plane into 3D, and investigate relative pose estimation and 3D registration of SfM maps. Relative pose estimation is a difficult task, as non-robust estimation fails in the presence of outliers. Random Sample Consensus (RANSAC), which is the goldstandard robust estimation method, requires setting an outlier threshold, which is non-trivial to set, and poor choices result in significantly worse performance. In Paper F, we develop an algorithm to automatically estimate this threshold from an initial guess that is less biased than previous approaches, leading to robust performance. Finally, we investigate registering SfM maps together. This is particularly interesting in distributed settings where, e.g., robots need to localize with respect to each other’s reference frames in order to collaborate. However, in this setting, using image-based localization approaches comes with downsides. In particular, computational complexity, compatibility issues, and privacy concerns severely limit the potential of such systems to be deployed. In Paper G we propose a new paradigm for registering SfM maps through point cloud registration, circumventing the above limitations. Finding that existing registration models trained on 3D scan data fail on this task, we develop a dataset for SfM registration. Training on our proposed dataset greatly improves performance on the task, showing the potential of the proposed paradigm.

The Psychology of Behaviour at Work Adrian Furnham, 2012-08-06 This superb introduction to the field of organizational psychology and organizational behaviour builds on the foundation of the highly successful first edition to provide up-to-date explanations of all the key topics in a clear, coherent and accessible style. The text is supported by numerous illustrations and examples as well as end-of-chapter summaries and concluding remarks. Topic sections on key research studies, as well as applied aspects such as human resources applications and cross-cultural issues, lead the reader through the complexities of the theory to its practical application. The Psychology of Behaviour at Work covers all major topics in the field, from vocational choice, personality, attitudes, motivation and stress, to cooperation, learning, training, group dynamics, decision making and leadership. Further sections introduce corporate culture and climate, as well as organisational structure, change and development, and a final section outlines predictions not only for the future study of organizational psychology, but of the future of work itself. As with the first edition, The Psychology of Behaviour at Work will prove to be an invaluable resource for psychology students on work and organizational psychology courses, business students on organizational behaviour courses, and human resources managers eager to expand their knowledge of this fascinating field.

The Girl Who Ate Books Nilanjana Roy, 2016-01-10 A unique collection of essays from one of India's best-loved critics From Bankimchandra Chatterjee to G.V. Desani to Vikram Seth, Indian writing in English has come a long way over the last hundred years. And Nilanjana Roy - voracious eater of books and sharpest of critics - has taken stock of it all. One of India's most widely read journalists, Roy has been writing reviews, columns, essays and features for over two decades. The Girl Who Ate Books revisits the best of these occasional pieces and weaves them together with a set of new personal essays. From early memories of living in a house made of books to encounters with men and women who hoarded books to the author's first taste of the printed word, this is a memoir of reading, loving and living with books like no other. Bringing together writers across generations - from the obscure Sake Dean Mahomet to the mischievous Khushwant Singh to the fiery Arundhati Roy - The Girl Who Ate Books gives us a ringside view of the theatre of Indian writing in English over several decades, and especially the last two. Written in the author's understated but unfailingly elegant style, this is an essential collection for those who live to read and read to live.
