Modern Relationships Mahzad Hojjat, Anne Moyer, 2024 This volume compiles the latest research and theory on close relationships in the twenty-first century from multi-disciplinary and international perspectives with the intent of taking stock of the cultural, political, and legal changes that have shaped the relationship landscape. Some of the important shifts that are captured are the rise of singlehood, online dating, and cohabitation, the new importance of social media, marriage equality, and changes in gender norms. New ways of forming families and unions via adoption, assisted reproduction, and remarriage are also covered, as well as coupling across cultural, racial, religious, and national lines.

Relationship Agreements and Communication in Monogamous and Consensually Non-Monogamous Relationships Sophie Martin, 2017 Consensual non-monogamy (CNM) has gained increasing academic interest and popularity within the media (Conley et al., 2013). The purpose of this study was to investigate agreements and communication across diverse relationship types. Participants were recruited through Amazon's Mechanical Turk, reported their 'relationship type' (polyamorous, swinging, open, monogamous), and completed a questionnaire about their agreements and related variables. The most common agreement among CNM participants was to have sex and romantic relationships with whomever they want, as long as there were no secrets. Monogamous participants were most willing to consider engaging in sex with others, as long as it was together. Communication about agreements was more frequently reported in CNM compared to monogamous participants. Overall, this research suggests that participants' agreements are largely consistent with their identified relationship type; CNM may be characterized by more frequent relational communication than monogamous relationships, but may also rely on a degree of implicit communication.

An Examination of Internalized Consensual Non-monogamy Negativity and Help Seeking Beliefs, Attitudes, and Intentions Megan Lynn Tracy, 2022 Although consensually non-monogamous (CNM) relationships have grown in prevalence (Haupt et al., 2017; Rubel & Bogaert, 2014), a high degree of stigma surrounding CNM relationships remains (Balzarini et al., 2018; A. C. Moors et al., 2013). Previous research has indicated that stigma surrounding CNM relationships may be internalized (Moors et al., 2021) and internalized stigma has been found to impact help seeking beliefs, attitudes, and intentions in similarly marginalized populations (Lappin, 2019). A multiple linear regression approach was used to examine how three dimensions of internalized CNM stigma predict help seeking beliefs, attitudes, and intentions within a CNM sample with previous experience as an additional variable. Public identification of CNM identity was found to predict attitudes toward seeking help (stigma tolerance) ($F(3, 162) = 4.815, p = .044$), R^2 of .082. When previous experience was included as an independent variable, a significant relationship was found between help seeking intentions, the factors of internalized CNM negativity, and previous experience ($F(4,160) = 5.63, p$

A Therapist's Guide to Consensual Nonmonogamy Rhea Orion, 2018-03-05 Consensual nonmonogamy (CNM) means that all partners in a relationship consent to expanded monogamy or polyamory. Clinicians are on the front line in providing support for the estimated millions pioneering these modern relationships. This first available guide for therapists provides answers to prevalent questions: What is the difference between expanded monogamy and polyamory? Is CNM healthy and safe? Why would someone choose the complexities of multiple partners? What about the welfare of children? Through illustrative case studies from research and clinical practice, therapists will learn to assist clients with CNM agreements, jealousy, sex, time, family issues, and much more. A Therapist's Guide to Consensual Nonmonogamy serves as a step forward toward expanding standard clinical training and helps inform therapists who wish to serve the CNM population.

Reasons for Sex and Relational Outcomes in Consensually Non-Monogamous and Monogamous Relationships Jessica Wood, 2018 Romantic partnerships provide an opportunity for emotional and sexual fulfillment. However, having all needs fulfilled by one person can be challenging. Consensual non-monogamy (CNM) describes relationship structures where relational needs are dispersed among multiple partners, potentially decreasing pressures placed on a primary relationship. The current research investigated how self-determined sexual motives were differentially associated with sexual need satisfaction and relational outcomes in CNM and monogamous relationships. In Study One, 348 individuals from Amazon's Mechanical Turk completed a cross-sectional survey. CNM and monogamous participants reported similar reasons for engaging in sex, though CNM participants were significantly more likely to have sex for personal intrinsic motives. No differences in mean levels of relationship and sexual satisfaction were found between CNM and monogamous individuals. Participants who engaged in sex for more self-determined reasons reported higher relational and sexual satisfaction and this relationship was mediated by sexual need fulfillment. In Study Two, 56 CNM dyads were recruited online to complete a survey on their sexual motives, need fulfillment, and relational outcomes for both a live-in partner and one additional partner. Overall, participants engaged in sex with both partners primarily for intrinsic reasons (e.g., pleasure), but reported higher mean scores with partner two for reasons such as physical intimacy and power dynamics. Structural equation modeling, guided by the actor-partner interdependence model, indicated that when individuals engaged in sex with their first partner for self-determined reasons (e.g., valuing sex), the sexual interaction was associated with meeting their own psychological needs and was thus positively related to their own relational outcomes (i.e., an actor effect), and their first partner's relational outcomes (i.e., a partner effect). Further, having sex for self-determined reasons with a second partner, and feeling more fulfilled with a second partner, was associated with lower sexual satisfaction of the first partner. This research extends theoretical understandings of motivation within CNM relationships and highlights the importance of sexual need fulfillment in relationship wellbeing.
