Literature for Composition Sylvan Barnet, William Burto, William E. Cain, 2006 Literature for Composition offers superior coverage of reading, writing, and argument in Barnet's signature accessible and clear style. Helpful discussions of the literary elements, compelling case studies, and a diverse array of selections organized thematically are included. This book is based on the assumption that students in composition or literature courses should encounter first-rate writing—not simply competent prose, but the powerful reports of experience that have been recorded by highly skilled writers past and present. The study of such writing offers pleasure and insight into life. It also leads to increased skill in communicating.

Writing and Literature Tanya Long Bennett, 2018-01-10 In the age of Buzzfeeds, hashtags, and Tweets, students are increasingly favoring conversational writing and regarding academic writing as less pertinent in their personal lives, education, and future careers. Writing and Literature: Composition as Inquiry, Learning, Thinking and Communication connects students with works and exercises and promotes student learning that is kairotic and constructive. Dr. Tanya Long Bennett, professor of English at the University of North Georgia, poses questions that encourage active rather than passive learning. Furthering ideas presented in Contribute a Verse: A Guide to First-Year Composition as a complimentary companion, Writing and Literature builds a new conversation covering various genres of literature and writing. Students learn the various writing styles appropriate for analyzing, addressing, and critiquing these genres including poetry, novels, dramas, and research writing. The text and its pairing of helpful visual aids throughout emphasizes the importance of critical reading and analysis in producing a successful composition. Writing and Literature is a refreshing textbook that links learning, literature, and life.

Excerpt: ... of sense, with just the touch of serious thought which marks Milton as a Puritan in all his works. He is still at play, he has not yet discovered all his powers, but he has one quality in these three poems which in his later work he was to lose, the quality of beauty, in the restricted sense of that word, as opposed to grandeur or sublimity. Even poets must pay the price of their gifts, and when Milton in the strength of his poetic manhood applies himself to Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme, his work has no more of this grace and loveliness of his youth when he could still allow himself to fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world. The sonnets of the period of the Rebellion show the gradual change in Milton's point of view and habits of thought. His mind is more and more engrossed in politics and the stern Hebraistic Puritan religion. In Paradise Lost the change is complete. The Milton who now, after twenty years, turns again wholly to poetry is another man. Paradise Lost gives us in poetic form Milton's conception of the organization of the universe, and his explanation of our sinful state. So extensive has been the influence of the poem, the majestic pageant which it unfolds has taken such hold of the imaginations of the English people, that in the minds of a whole multitude Milton's account of the events of man's creation and fall is confused with that of the Bible itself and has become a part of the traditional ideas of the race. And yet few people, upon a careful examination, would find the poem satisfactory as a system of thought. For all the use that the Christian religion has made of it, Milton's system can hardly be squared with what is ordinarily considered Christian belief. Milton was not a...
