The Defence of the Dardanelles Michael Forrest,2013-01-19 This WWI history examines the Ottoman Army's defense of the Dardanelle Strait during Winston Churchill's failed Gallipoli Campaign. The Dardanelles Strait, separating Europe and Asia Minor, was fortified in the fifteenth century with massive bronze bombards causing any unwelcome ships to run a truly formidable gauntlet. And indeed it was on March 18th, 1915, when a powerful fleet of British and French warships attempted to clear the Strait. The attack failed at the cost of three ships sunk and three more seriously damaged. The Allied failure to take control the Strait led to its disastrous invasion of Gallipoli. Using maps, photographs, and other illustrations, this in-depth study examines the strengths of the Turkish defenses, including the Ottoman Army's reliance on German Krupp guns. Historian Michael Forrest also assesses the relative strengths and weaknesses of the Royal and French Navies, as well as the flaws of Winston Churchill's strategy. Damningly, Forrest's research proves that British intelligence sources had previously assessed that a naval attack alone would not succeed. Many of the fortifications on the Gallipoli peninsula and the Asian shore are still accessible. This volume helpfully identifies those that can be visited, many of which still have wrecked guns emplaced.

Straits of the Dardanelles, and the Bosphorus Walter Robinson,2017-10-13 Excerpt from Straits of the Dardanelles, and the Bosphorus: The Right of Way Under International Law Nor does there seem to be much that is objection able in this arrangement, which has merely for its motive the restoration of the commercial relations which previously existed between the subjects of the Czar and of the Sultan; but the effect of all the stipulations of that treaty combined would be serious in the extreme, as it would make of the Black Sea a Russian lake, actually making it sub ject to the rule of one despotic will, instead of placing it under the protection of a just and equal law. The Preliminary Treaty, however, is fortunately as yet wholly without juridical sanction, for although the war put an end to treaties as between the two belligerents themselves, yet, inasmuch as these belligerents had some years ago entered into treaty engagements with other Powers, no new stipulations contravening those previous engagements can be valid until ratified by all the signatory Powers. It is obvious that Russia cannot plead special immunity from the observance of treaties, and, whilst herself flagrantly violating them, hold England bound to observe every clause to the letter. Nevertheless this very Power, after menacing Constantinople with the presence of its armies, and thereby forcing the Government of this country to despatch the fleet into the Sea of Marmora, now ventures to complain of that act as a contravention of the Treaties of 1856 and 1871, because, forsooth, it lacks the formality of a firman from the Sultan, although it is difficult to conceive how the Sultan could now be regarded as a sufficiently free agent to either give or to withhold his consent. In fact, in dealing with a State or person in such a condition of duress as to amount to positive disability, consent to further the performance of all just and necessary acts, must be assumed, and therefore need not be required, and by the same deduction the English Government would be equally justified in ordering the fleet through the Bosphorus into the Black Sea. The Straits from Troy to Constantinople John D. Grainger, 2022-01-31 In ancient times, the series of waterways now known as the Turkish Straits, comprising the Dardanelles (or Hellespont), Sea of Marmara and the Bosphorus, formed both a divide and a bridge between Europe and Asia. Its western and eastern entrances were guarded, at different times, by two of the most fabled cities of all time: respectively Troy (in Asia) and Byzantium (or Byzantium, on the European coast). The narrow crossing points at the Hellespont and Bosphorus were strategically important invasion routes while the waters themselves were vital routes of travel and commerce, particularly the supply of grain from the hinterland of the Black Sea to the Greek cities. This made them sought after prizes and sources of friction between successive empires, Persians, Macedonians and Romans among them, and ensured they were associated with some of the great names of history, from Odysseus to Xerxes, Alexander to Constantine the Great. John D Grainger relates the fascinating history of this pivotal region from the Trojan War to Byzantium's refounding as the new capital of the Roman Empire. Renamed Constantinople it dominated the straits for a thousand years.

The Dardanelles Campaign, 1915 Fred R. van Hartesveldt,1997-11-20 The passage of time has not slowed the production of books and articles about World War I. This volume provides a guide to the historiography and bibliography of the Dardanelles Campaign, including the Gallipoli invasion. It focuses on military history but also provides information on political histories that give significant attention to the handling of the Dardanelles Campaign. The opening section of the book provides background information about the campaign, discusses the major sources of information, and lays out the major interpretative disputes. A comprehensive annotated bibliography follows. This book nicely complements the two earlier volumes on World War I battles—The Battle of Jutland by Eugene Rasor and The Battles of the Somme by Fred R. van Hartesveldt.

The New Russia ,1920 This publication includes the continuation of Bulletins of the Russian liberation committee under the heading Facts and documents.
