Human Development Index - an Elaborate Means of Evaluating a Country's Hd Robert Nagel, 2007-08 Seminar paper from the year 2004 in the subject Economics - Statistics and Methods, grade: 1.00, University of Hamburg, course: Programm: MIBA, 33 entries in the bibliography, language: English, abstract: Why was an index like the Human Development Index (HDI) established in the first place? That question and what the HDI really is about is the topic of this paper. The aim is to highlight its uniqueness and show how it differentiates from other measurement tools of human development. This assignment was done with secondary research only. Surface Measure of Human Development Aalok Ranjan Chaurasia, 2022 This paper proposes an alternative approach for the construction of human development index which is based on the concept of human development surface. The proposed index is the weighted average of the power mean of the order  $1/2$  of the health index, education index and the income index which are used to construct the human development index by the United Nations and address problems associated with constructing the index using arithmetic mean or geometric mean as the aggregation function. The level of human development across countries based on the alternative human development index is found to be similar to that obtained by the conventional human development index. The decomposition of the increase in the index between 1990 and 2021 suggests that progress in the education index has been the main driver of human progress in the world during the last 30 years whereas the contribution of the progress in the health dimension and income dimension has small.

Measuring Human Capital Barbara Fraumeni, 2021-07-12 Measuring Human Capital addresses a country's most important resource: its own people. Bettering human capital benefits individuals and their country and leads to improved sustainability for the future. For many years economists only used Gross Domestic Product (GDP), now acknowledged to be inadequate without supplemental measures, to gauge a country's overall value. There is now a recognition that many variables contribute to a country's worth, which make accurate measurement difficult. Looking beyond GDP by focusing on human capital, researchers, policymakers, government officials, and students can understand what elements impact human capital and how they might improve it in order to increase economic growth and well-being. - Addresses six major measures of human capital, covering at least 130 countries - Describes both monetary and index estimates - Includes two monetary measures by the World Bank and the Inclusive Wealth Report by UNEP and the Urban Institute of Kyushu University - Includes four index measures by the Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation of the University of Washington, United Nations Development Programme, World Economic Forum, and World Bank - Includes two country chapters, one on China and the other on the United States

The Measure of America, 2010-2011 Kristen Lewis,Sarah Burd-Sharps,2010-11-01 The Measure of America, 2010-2011, is the definitive report on the overall well-being of all Americans. How are Americans doing—compared to one another and compared to the rest of the world? This important, easy-to-understand guide will provide all of the essential information on the current state of America. This fully illustrated report, with over 130 color images, is based on the groundbreaking American Human Development Index, which provides a single measure of the well-being for all Americans, disaggregated by state and congressional district, as well as by race, gender, and ethnicity. The Index rankings of the 50 states and 435 congressional districts reveal huge disparities in the health, education, and living standards of different groups. For example, overall, Connecticut ranked first among states on the 2008-2009 Index, and Mississippi ranked last, suggesting that there is a 30-year gap in human development between the two states. Further, among congressional districts, New York's 14th District, in Manhattan, ranked first, and California's 20th District, near Fresno, ranked last. The average resident of New York's 14th District earned over three times as much as the average resident of California's 20th District, lived over four years longer, and was ten times as likely to have a college degree. The second in the American Human Development Report series, the 2010-2011 edition features a completely updated Index, new findings on the well-being of different racial and ethnic groups from state to state, and a closer look at disparities within major metro areas. It also shines a spotlight on threats to progress and opportunity for some Americans as well as highlighting tested approaches to fostering resilience among different groups. Using a revelatory framework for explaining the very nature of human progress, this report can be used not only as a way to measure America but also to build upon past policy successes, protect the progress made over the last half century from new risks, and create an infrastructure of opportunity that can serve a new generation of Americans. Beautifully illustrated with stunning four-color graphics that allow for a quick visual understanding of often complex but important issues, The Measure of America is essential reading for all Americans, especially for social scientists, policy makers, and pundits who want to understand where Americans stand today.

Introducing an Islamic Human Development Index (I-HDI) to Measure Development in OIC Countries MB Hendrie Anto, 2018 Human development and welfare of human being has a pivotal place in Islamic development concept. Majority of Islamic scholars come to the conclusion that the objective of the Shariah (Maqasid al-Shariah) is to promote well-being of all mankind, which lies in safeguarding faith, their human self, their intellect, their posterity and their wealth. Consequently, the human development in Islamic perspective must be based on Maqasid al-Shariah. The existing Human Development Index (HDI) published by UNDP might be the most comprehensive indicator, but is not fully compatible and sufficient for measuring human development in Islamic perspective. The underlying theory and concept to develop HDI is not based on Maqasid al-Shariah. Measuring human development level of Muslim countries would be more appropriate by using a specific Islamic Human Development Index (IHDI). This paper is aimed to (i) construct a new measurement of human development under Islamic perspective, and then (ii) simulate this index to measure human development level in OIC countries. The findings show that the rank composition between I-HDI and HDI is slightly different. On one hand, a number of countries enjoy a better rank in I-HDI compared with HDI. On the other hand, several countries suffer a marked deterioration of rank. The high score group in I-HDI is still dominated mostly by Middle East Countries and the bottom line is still dominated by African Countries. In general, the contribution of material welfare index (MWI) in the whole I-HDI is superior which indicates the importance of material resources.

Is Human Development Index (HDI) a Reflector of Quality of Air? A Comparative Study on Developed and Developing Countries Swarup Santra,2014 Economic Indicators alone cannot capture the totality of 'Quality of Life' (QOL). The Most acceptable Measure of QOL is the 'Human Development Index' (HDI) of UNDP. HDI is a composite Index of three Indicators of three essential dimensions of life. These three indicators are of per capita GDP adjusted to purchasing power, life expectancy at birth, and adult literacy rate (including the gross school enrollment ratios). While, the measurement of HDI is considered as a measure of Human well-being, it ignores the other dimension of life, which is the quality of natural environment. Human being lives within this natural environment. In a polluted environment, human being cannot be stay well. In this study, it was examined whether the Quality of Air is Reflected through the HDI or not. In this study, the result has been come out that the Quality of Air is reflected through the HDI only for the Developing Countries. But, in case of Developed Countries, the Quality of Air is not reflected through the HDI.

Human Development Report 1992 United Nations Development Programme,1992 Since its headline-making debut, the Human Development Report has become an essential resource for development specialists, economists, and political scientists around the world. The 1992 Report not only updates the findings of the earlier volumes, but also examines the international dimensions of human development, showing how global economic growth and the expansion of the world economy have filtered down to poor economies and poor people in developing countries. In addition, it examines linkages between human development and international markets for products, capital, and labor, addresses issues of global governance, and presents updated human development indicators for more than 160 countries.
